

Predicting Mental Health Illness Among Working Professionals Using Machine Learning

This project aims to leverage machine learning algorithms and data analytics to develop a predictive model for identifying mental health issues in the workplace. By analyzing employee data while respecting privacy and ethical considerations, the project strives to provide early interventions, ultimately promoting well-being, reducing burnout, and enhancing the mental health of working professionals.

